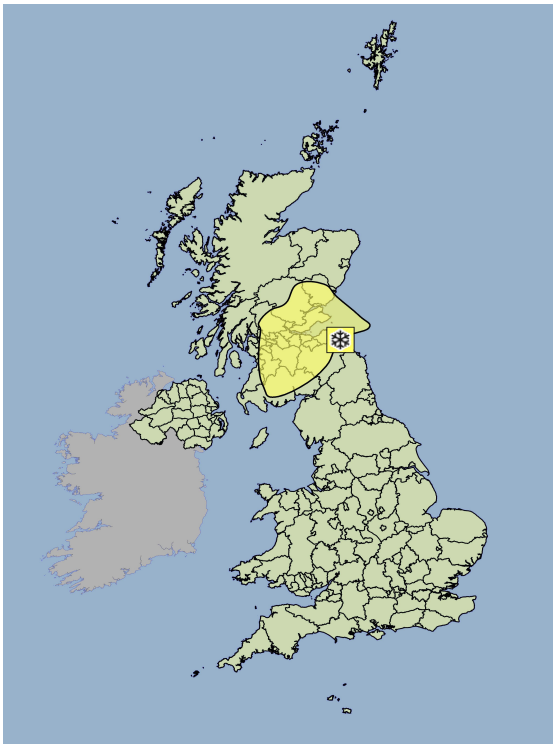
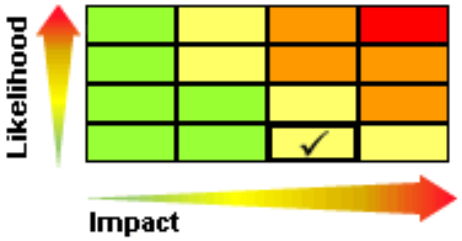
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
A developing area of low pressure is expected to track across northern England overnight Thursday and into Friday. On its northern flank, cold air may be drawn into the system, with a band of rain across central and southern Scotland possibly turning to snow to low levels. Some moderate or heavy snow is possible for a time, before the frontal system clears away to the south later on Friday morning.

The development of this system is very complex, and details of its track and the areas at greatest risk of snowfall may well change in the lead up to this event. As such, this Alert is likely to be updated in the coming days to refine these details as confidence in developments increases.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Alert of Snow

Valid from 00:10 on Fri, 12th Dec 2014 until 09:00 on Fri, 12th Dec 2014

A period of rainfall is likely to fall as snow over high ground, before transitioning to snow at all levels, during the early hours of Friday morning. Snow may be moderate or heavy at times, and may well last for several hours. Accumulations of 2-5 cm are possible across lower parts of the warning area, with 10-15 cm possible above about 200 m.

The public should be aware of the potential of disruption to travel and also the risk of hazardous driving conditions.
